Zorina Exie Jerome Frey is the owner and CEO of I.W.A. Publishing Services, consulting aspiring writers and experts to publish a book in their area of expertise since 2006. She graduated from Indiana University South Bend (IUSB) with a bachelor's degree in Mass Communications majoring in Journalism with an English minor and a certificate in web design. She is also a Lester M. Wolfson Literary Award recipient. Zorina has worked on the editorial board for Indiana University South Bend's Michiana Monologues nonprofit organization and has served under various titles as president, director, editor, and public relations associate since 2009. She also has written for Examiner.com since 2010.

Zorina has 8 years of publishing experience. She authored The Right Way to Self-Publish, I Won't Apologize For Being a Woman, Conquering Haters Dealing With Negative People, Sticks & Stones, Conquering Haters with Poetry, and Open, Candid Haikus about Everyday Life. Her poetry has been published in IUSB's Analecta and New Views on Gender literary magazines.

She has read and performed poetry from her books at colleges, universities, public schools, and community events.

Zorina is also the contributing author and copyeditor of IUSB's Michiana Monologues, A World of Difference and Michiana Monologues Love, Joy, & Pain. Both books were used for the university's women's studies courses.
